

Screen Scrape. Think of this as a sandwich. Your site's header is one piece of bread, the footer the other. The AMS generated pages are everything in-between (hold the mayo).
Cool: fits to height of content. Drool: navigation can become outdated.

IFRAME. It's an HTML tag that allows one to load another website in a pre-defined width and height window within any page. Cool: better change control over user interface, navigation. Drool: fixed height makes for awkward spacing sometimes.

Examples

Association of Zoos and Aquariums (AZA)

Avecra's netFORUM

Screen Scrape Integration

- Separate log-in page.
- Log-in page maintained in CMS but takes you to ams.aza.org that is powered by netFORUM. Log-out page also maintained in CMS.

The American Society for Pharmacology and Experimental Therapeutics (ASPET)

Euclid's ClearVantage

Screen Scrape Integration

- Separate log-in page.
- Log-in page maintained in CMS. Logging-in verifies user in ClearVantage, then returns user to the home page in a logged-in state.

Construction Owners Association of America (COAA)

ISSI's IMPak

Screen Scrape Integration

- Log-in fields in header.
- Logging-in verifies user in AMS then returns user to the home page in a logged-in state.

International Foodservice Distributors Association (IFDA)

ASI's iMIS

IFRAME Integration

- Separate log-in page. Notice the open space under the Demographics tab.
- Not much iMIS functionality for IFDA makes this IFRAME less intrusive.

Notes

- If your site is mobile friendly (even responsive) it's likely that your AMS-generated pages aren't.
- A separate login page is less time consuming during development to implement but not quite as elegant:
 - Redirect (less time) to logged-in page versus dynamically updating page with logged-in information (more time).
 - IFRAMES complicate matters – can be logged out of IFRAME but not template.
- Use a central logout page. Set redirect logout links to parent site.
- Site redesign: set aside time for your AMS partner to collaborate with your website partner. More customization = more partner collaboration time.
- AMS pages generally don't look as sharp as your site's other pages. Recreating AMS pages, however, leads to AMS upgrade issues (and it can get expensive).
